Trade Signs of Old Charleston
Main Library, Second Floor Classroom at 6 p.m.
In an age before literacy was common, businesses used signs with hand-painted images rather than words to advertise their goods and services. Charleston's early newspapers are full of hundreds of references to such trade signs, including such colorful names as "The Sign of the Unicorn," "the Buck and Breeches," "Stars," "the Hand and Ring," and many more. Join CCPL's historian, Dr. Nic Butler, for an amusing tour of these forgotten Charleston signs and learn how they influenced the advertising practices of modern business.
